Apps

*ForScore - store any music pdf, free or purchased, and back up to iCloud/etc.

Piano Lit - free to receive one piece to inbox weekly, with score and performance video. Great for encountering new music and sightreading. Can pay for more.

Decide Now - easily make your own spinners - Think Wheel of Fortune (White keys, Black keys, M/m, improvisation prompts)

*Pro Metronome - lite version is free and very useable.

*NinGenius Ultimate - only $5, allows multiple users and instruments, teaches each level first with flashcards. Kids like the fun theme.

Note Reading - Note Rush, Flashnote Derby (better for younger kids), Bees Keys $1?

Rhythm Lab - tapping, Rhythm Swing for little kids

The Most Amazing Sheep Game T-M-A-S-G staying on the beat!

LOOPIMAL - weird but fun way to learn about composing in multiple voices.

Music Theory Pro - cheap and great for teens/adults. Very comprehensive

Wimbo - not sure if this is still free, or if you can only get through monthly subscription: keys, staff, ET, rhythm, chords

*Interval Climb and Sticky Chords fun apps for kids with a mild race element, $2 each.

*Chet - tons of melodic dictation-listening w/o having to write it down. Great ET

Tell me you aren't moved by this chord progression Music with Sam 30 minutes

There's a chord progression that pops up here and there in all kinds of different music, and whenever someone uses it, it's always a special moment. In this video I analyse this chord progression through a whole bunch of examples which span almost 300 years and include classical music, film music, and pop music. As I go, I provide tools for thinking about the progression so that we can build up to a huge Rachmaninov moment.
